The session will be limited to six writers. Each writer must provide seven, double-spaced copies of their piece. They will read it aloud. The other workshopers will make notes on their copy. When the reader is done, their job is to listen as their co-workshoppers critique their work. The critique is meant to be helpful. (The moderator reserves the right to end any panelist's comments if they seem unnecessarily harsh.) Any writer who does not bring six, properly formatted copies of less than 1500 words will lose their place in the program. (Sorry, no poetry for this one.) Each writer's segment is limited to fifteen minutes total between reading and critique. The longer your reading, the fewer comments you'll get. The writer gets all their copies back so they can digest any written comments there wasn't time to discuss.	FALSE
